GAME CHANGERS IN CINEMA: SPORTS IN FILM
This recurring series on athletes and their representation on celluloid looks at four game-changing films on sports and the men and women who challenge how athletes are perceived and understood. From the battle of the sexes, to the psychological battle that rages within champions, these films cover sports, gamemanship, honor, and truth in an unflinching manner. Join Valerie Franco as she provides commentary on Bull Durham, Regency Bull, He Got Game, and Battle of the Sexes, April 30 - May 21, 12:30 - 3:30 p.m., Lorber Hall. 4 sessions. Fee: $100

BILL VECK: BASEBALL’S P.T. BARNUM
Bill Veck was known for ballpark giveaways, exploding scoreboards, and Marriam landing on the playing field. His oddball promotional schemes brought him public attention and unparalleled success. Join Wharton alumni, CPA and attorney Samuel Gunther as he recounts the flashy PR stunts and gimmicks of Veck, the legendary owner of the Cleveland Indians and White Sox. Thursday, May 16, 10 a.m. - 12 noon, Lorber Hall. Fee: $30

OUR HERITAGE: COMPETITIVE SPORTS

Before LIU Post was founded as a college in 1954, its several miles of land and the surrounding neighborhood, were home to multi-millionaires, including the Whitney, Vanderbilt and Keene families. From 1904 to 1939, more than 10 private estates in this area of the North Shore were the setting for competitive sports such as fox hunts, steeple chasing and golf. In 1904, William K. Vanderbilt, II (1878-1944), a pioneer motor enthusiast and president of the New York Central Railroad Company, wanted to give America a new form of sport, and offered a trophy and cash prize to participate in car races on local dirt roads. The Vanderbilt Cup Races ran throughout Nassau County, including Northern Boulevard (Route 25A), then called North Hempstead Turnpike, where LIU Post is now located. Pictured: Willie K. Vanderbilt, circa 1905, and driver Arthur Duray in 1906.
