

MICHAEL CULLINANE

Michael Cullinane has been a Professor of U.S. History at the University of Roehampton in London since 2017. He has also taught diplomatic history and United States history at University College Cork, the University of Leicester, and Northumbria University.

His research explores the foreign policies of the United States during the early 20th century, and particularly the international relations of that period. Through at least 10 publications, Cullinane aims to answer historical questions through an evaluation of media, memory, politics, and culture. His most recent book, Theodore Roosevelt's Ghost: The History and Memory of an American Icon, is the first comprehensive examination of Roosevelt's legacy and details the frequent refashioning of this American icon in popular memory. He has published journal articles about Theodore Roosevelt including Theodore Roosevelt in the Eyes of the Allies in the Journal of the Gilded Age and Progressive Era, and Invoking Teddy: The Inspiration of John McCain's Foreign Policy in Diplomacy and Statecraft.

Cullinane has won a number of awards including the Theodore Roosevelt Book Prize in 2018, the AHRC Standard Fellowship from 2016-2017 for A Call to Action: Raising Awareness of Theodore Roosevelt Island, and the AHRC Early Career Fellowship from 2014-2015 for Memorial Communities and Presidential Legacy: Remembering Theodore Roosevelt. His research interests include: Anglo-American relations, transatlantic studies, public memory and art, and international law. His latest research project will look at the formation of international law in the late nineteenth century and how that field developed through networks of activists.

Cullinane earned his BA at Pace University in New York City and University College Cork in Ireland (National University of Ireland). He also earned an MA and PhD in History from University College Cork.