Dear Members of the LIU Community,

The health and safety of LIU community members is our top priority.

As a follow up to our previous email, we wanted to provide an update regarding Coronavirus. We are in constant contact with health authorities, and will continue to follow their recommendations and provide information to our campus community.

Respiratory illnesses are common at this time of year, especially on college campuses, and our University has well-established protocols for dealing with these and other communicable illnesses. Additionally, health professionals will be uniformly taking travel histories from anyone presenting with respiratory illnesses. The University is disinfecting all public areas as it has done during the typical flu season.

The Centers for Disease Control and Prevention (CDC) issued updated public health protocols for people who have recently returned from China. Anyone entering the U.S. from February 3rd forward who has been in China during the preceding 14 days should self-isolate (stay home) until 14 days after the date they departed China. Prior to this statement, the CDC issued updated travel guidance for China, recommending that travelers avoid all nonessential travel to all of the country. 2019 Novel Coronavirus (2019-nCoV).

Please find updated information about the coronavirus’s symptoms and current recommendations from the New York State Health Department at https://www.health.ny.gov/diseases/communicable/coronavirus/.
